

History

The Municipal Clerk is one of the oldest professions in local government, along with tax collector. The profession traces back before Biblical times.

When America was settled and governments formed, the office of the clerk was one of the first to be created. The clerk recorded all the vital records such as births, deaths, marriages, deeds, meetings, and election of officers at annual town meetings.

In writing one of the first ever textbooks published on municipal administration, Professor William Bennett Munro stated,

“No other office in municipal service has so many contacts. It serves the mayor, the city council, the city manager, (when there is one) and all administrative departments without exception. All of them call upon it, almost daily, for some service or information. Its work is not spectacular, but it demands versatility, alertness, accuracy, and no end of patience. The public does not realize how many loose ends of city administration this office pulls together.”

These words, written in 1934, are even more appropriate today. Since that time, many of the duties of the clerk have been formalized and are governed by state statute.
